As a programmer, I love the random aspect..... Mostly. But, it seems to crash quite a bit. I have the original and never remember it crashing. I'm not sure if it is because of NWN or ID.

Some things really need to change though.

The each extra party member is as dumb as a box of rocks. Mages have no problem flinging every spell at a kobold. There should be an option to tell them to never engage, especially the plot givers that insist on accompanying you. There is "stand your ground", but as soon as an enemy comes close they engage. And that happens a lot in area entrances close to multiple (sometimes over 20) enemies.

The monsters are too random and I don't like that good creatures, like metallic dragons, are mostly enemies. Although they might be found as merchants and such in some camps. Camps are the only place that you can rest or sell items in ID. If you can't find a camp with a merchant, you are just out of luck.

Also, monks don't seem to run across a lot of useful monk specific items. I have a dexterity based halfling monk that in 20 levels has only ran across 5 magic kamas., and no monk specific gloves.

What I do like is that it allows characters to level up pretty quickly if you do the quests. That gives a chance to try interesting combination without cheating.

Overall, I do recommend it if you like a lot of hack and slash with minimal role playing. There is some role playing with the quests, but those are all optional.
